WOMEN IN EUROPE.

Observations made by an American Worker in Europe.

When we landed at Liverpool and went to the Adelphi Hotel, our unsophisticated eyes were opened to an unusual extent to find all our wants attended to by women instead of men, as we had been accustomed to have in our own land. The white-capped maid—this term is applied to all ages—answered bells, brought up water, hot or cold, lunch, or whatever was required. We actually expected to have her bring up our luggage, but a male porter, fortunately, did this.

Our stay in Liverpool being very short, we had not much time for observation, but as we advanced every thing seemed to us very strange. Ice-water, that American luxury, is a thing rarely used by the English people, and such a thing as a man behind a bar is unheard of. Maids—selected. I was informed, for their beauty as much as any other consideration—attend the bar of every hotel; and, although we American women look upon this with peculiar feelings, in old England it is a custom, and the position is regarded as respectable as any other a woman may occupy in service. At the hotels there are no housekeepers in the sense we use the word. The first chambermaid takes most of the responsibilities of such a position, while the actual labor is shared by the under-chambermaids. The scrubbing, cleaning and dusting is done by housemaids.

Covent Garden market in London presents a panorama well worth seeing. Vegetables, fruit and flowers in abundance are disposed of with a great deal of noise and clatter. The vendors being mostly women, who drive a bargain with a shrewdness unequalled elsewhere in the busy marts of London. Especially was this fact shown in the answers to some of the prying Yankees, whose inquisitiveness broke forth in "How much is this?" "Where is that raised?" "Do you sell by the pound or quart?" "What do you call this?"

A novel sight was about twenty-five women sitting in a semi-circle shelling peas. Inquiry elicited the fact that they received for this work a penny a quart of shelled peas, and when peas were plentiful they could make three pence a day.

Traveling in a railway car over the continent for a month would be a good school for the American who has not yet learned what to do with his legs and spreads them out on two or more seats in our American car. The coaches here are divided into compartments about five feet wide, with two seats running the width of the car facing each other. Each seat holds five persons. The guard, who sits along the outside of the coach while it is bowling along at the rate of a mile a minute, quickly spies a vacancy, so at the next station it is filled if there is a passenger requiring it, and there you must sit, knee to knee, with your back to the wall, and no chance to stretch out and take things easy Yankee fashion.

All along the route we saw evidences of women's rights with a vengeance. Women stood manfully side by side with men in the fields and gardens, binding grain, making hay, digging and picking. Finally we saw them yoked into the small carts that haul the produce about the streets. I am sure that at every stage of the journey the women of the expedition were more and more thankful that they were Americans.—Mrs. Leonora M. Barry, in Chicago News.

FEED FOR POULTRY.

Every Thing Considered, Corn is the Best and Cheapest.

I do not propose to go into a scientific analysis of the various foods to show which contains the most fat, which the most starch, and all that, because I recognize one fact, and that is that something besides the bare constituents of the food which we feed to our fowls must be considered. When we feed corn to our fowls we must remember that corn and water are not absolutely all that the fowls take into their crops; they are supposed to eat some green food, some meat food, some lime, and various other things which they pick up here and there, and which we know nothing about. Analysis tells us the component parts of corn and water, but does not tell us what influence all these other things which accompany the fowls' feed at the same time have upon the corn and water; therefore, we experiment carefully, and when we get through experimenting we ought to know about what we are doing. We have all heard that corn is too fattening for fowls and does not produce eggs. I will say that I will take a flock of fowls as soon as the grass starts, and give them their freedom, with nothing in the form of food provided for them but corn and water and shell, and they will beat any flock of the same size fed by the most improved bill of fare. So much for corn. It is, and always, the mainstay. To be sure, the Asiatic breeds take on fat easily, like the Berkshire swine, and must be fed accordingly; but we are not considering Asiatic fowls now, and although some of the other breeds may sometimes—when advanced in years—get fatter than is good for them, still corn is the main thing after all.—American Poultry Yard.

FINGERS BEFORE FORKS.

A Peculiar Incident That Happened Less Than Three Centuries Ago.

The Duchess of Beaufort, dining once at Madame de Guise's with King Henri IV, of France, extended one hand to receive his Majesty's salutation while she dipped the fingers of the other hand into a dish to pick out what was to her taste. This incident happened in the year 1693. It demonstrates that less than three hundred years ago the fingers were still used to perform the office now assigned to forks, in the highest and most refined circles of society. At about this time, in fact, was the turning-point when forks began to be used as table utensils, and were now. When we reflect how nice were the ideas of that refined age on all matters of outer decency and behavior, and how strict was the etiquette of the courts, we may well wonder that the fork was so late in coming into use as a table-furnishing. The ladies of the middle ages and the Renaissance were not less proud of a delicate, well-kept hand than those of our own days, and yet they picked the meat from the platter with their slender white fingers, and in them bore it to their mouths. The fact is all the more remarkable, because the form of the fork was familiar enough, and its application to other uses was not uncommon.—J. von Falke, in Popular Science Monthly.

HOW TO KEEP APPLES.

Of the many plans in use by different persons, one is to store the fruit temporarily in bins in a barn or other building until the advent of freezing weather. Another is to keep them in narrow cribs in the orchard. Of the two the latter is the best, if the crib is made in the shade and is further protected from rain and sun by loose boards. The only advantage that can be claimed for keeping them in bulk for a few weeks is a saving in coöperation, as the apples that will inevitably rot or prove defective in the interim need not be barreled. It is, however, liable to the objection of much more handling than when barreled in the orchard as the picking, and furthermore it is thought a full exposure to the atmosphere is not the best condition to resist decay.

As commonly arranged, a cellar is the last place in which apples should be stored until it becomes necessary to prevent them from freezing, and quite often a wet cellar will prove better than a dry one. There is probably no better way of keeping apples in barrels during the varying temperature of autumn and early winter than in a store-room on the ground floor of a building having thick walls. At each end of the room there should be a door and windows by which such a circulation of air can be maintained as the general temperature may require. Such a place will afford as good conditions for the preservation of fruit by natural means as can be obtained, and in many sections can be safely used through the entire winter.

The trouble with cellars arises mainly from defective ventilation. The occasional opening of windows does not afford in a good form. A constant and regular circulation is what is wanted. Where the outside air can be admitted at the bottom through an underground passage and

Why It Pays Hotel-keepers to Be Liberal with Their Stationery.

"The quantity of paper used by us for message blanks is enormous," said the manager of a city telephone office to a reporter the other day, "and much of it is wasted, as far as we are concerned. A man who wants to write a hasty note or pencil a calculation takes one of our blanks, because it is handy and costs him nothing. I wonder how many people recollect that they are treating the telephone company unfairly. Not very many, I am afraid."

And yet the telephone companies manage to survive, as do also the hotel-keepers of the country, who are beginning to make an organized "kick" against furnishing stationery to their customers. It doesn't seem to count with the skilful mind that the people who patronize their establishments help advertise them by every heading and envelope sent out. A ton of paper will furnish a dizzy lot

CREAM OF NEWS.

Law-Makers Investigate the Asylum.

The joint committee of the Legislature made its investigation of the Western Asylum a day or two ago. On Friday Senators J. S. Wortham, of Leitchfield, Sam E. English, of Jefferson county and A. H. Stewart, the Republican member from Prestonburg, who was his party's nominee for U. S. Senator, arrived and spent the day at the Asylum. They remained to dinner and made a thorough inspection of every department of the institution. This portion of the committee returned to Frankfort Friday night.

On Saturday night Representatives W. M. Moore, of Cynthiana, and Tibbis Carpenter, two of the seven members of the House Committee, arrived and after being joined here by Hon. H. B. Clark, who is a member of the Committee, they made a visit to the Asylum Sunday afternoon and were shown through the buildings. They finished their inspection in time to leave on the 5 o'clock train the same evening.

The gentlemen will formulate their official report after they get back to Frankfort, but they will undoubtedly make a very complimentary report of the management of the Asylum. They unhesitatingly expressed themselves as highly pleased with the treatment given patients, the judicious and economic manner in which the finances are handled, the improved condition of the property since the recent repairs and the painstaking diligence shown by the various officers in looking after every department of the business.

The Committee will report as to the over-crowded condition of the institution, which was one of the main points upon which information was wanted.

"Essie Davis" Not Dead.

"Essie Davis," a scarlet woman of St. Louis, came near ending her life last week by taking morphine. This is an assumed name of a girl who was born in Greenville, Ky. She is a daughter of Judge Charles Eaves, a prominent lawyer and jurist of Muhlenburg county. The girl's mother was an elegant woman and the downfall of her wayward daughter broke her heart. The daughter's name is Miriam and she grew up to be a beautiful blonde and was conceded to be one of the prettiest girls in her section of the state. She soon evinced a disposition to be imprudent in her conduct and it was not long before she was led astray. She afterwards married a man named Reno, but subsequently ran off with Bert Wing, a man who had been raised up from childhood with her, and the couple lived as man and wife in St. Louis. Here she met Joe Glenn, also a young Kentuckian and a former friend of Wing's. The latter subsequently caught Glenn in the girl's room and killed him on the spot, for which crime he has just completed a term in the Missouri penitentiary. The girl for the last five or six years has been alternately in a reformatory convent and following a life of shame in St. Louis. Her family, of course, disowned her long ago, and she has at last sunk so low that in her despair she sought death by her own hand, the victim of her own waywardness and sin. She is still young, being less than 30 years of age. The St. Louis papers say she was saved by hard work and will recover.

"The Little Tycoon" will be presented on the eve of Feb. 21st at the Opera House, and the indications point to a most successful and enjoyable affair. And aside from the attractions and pleasures to be anticipated from the assemblage of Sir Knights and ladies fair to be drawn together by the event of the celebration of the Semi-Centennial of the Hopkinsville Masonic Lodge, the benevolent aims of the entertainment are worthy of the highest credit and most liberal support. The Masonic Home is an admirable institution, its good work being thoroughly appreciated in all Masonic circles. The management of this opera has taken pains to have everything as attractive as special and appropriate scenery, costumes and accessories can make it, while good singing and acting by a well-selected company of amateurs is assured.

BRAME CAUGHT.

LEMON'S MURDERER OVERHAULED IN NEBRASKA.

Located by Decoy Letters and Nabbed Friday Night.

Passed Here Sunday Enroute to Nashville.

The announcement that Wm. T. Brame had been captured created a good deal of excitement here Sunday morning. The news came in the Nashville American at 10 o'clock and in five minutes a crowd had gathered about the KENTUCKIAN bulletin board, where the news had been posted as soon as received. The fact that he would pass through the city at 5 p. m. en route to Nashville, Tenn., was also posted and the result was that fully a thousand people were at the depot when the train passed.

The prisoner was in the chair car on the rear of the train. Just before reaching Hopkinsville the officers permitted him to take off his handcuffs, wash his face and light a cigar. He appeared at the window smoking the cigar and after bowing to a few friends whom he recognized he walked across the car to avoid the gaze of the crowd who climbed upon the steps and upon each other's shoulders in their efforts to get a sight of the prisoner. He was clad in a suit of working clothes. A pair of blue cottonade pants seemed to be worn as overalls and his coat was of a heavy striped goods. The car doors were securely locked before the train stopped and were not opened. Only about half a dozen men were in the chair car, including the detective and guards.

WHERE HE WAS CAUGHT.

Brame was located by Chief of Detectives Stewart, of the L. & N. railroad force, by means of decoy letters and his whereabouts had been known for some time. He was found employed as an ice-cutter at the village of Florence, a few miles north of Omaha, Neb. He was going under the assumed name of John H. Thompson.

The capture was made Friday night and Brame at once confessed his identity and admitted the killing of Lemon.

THE DETAILS OF THE CRIME

are fresh in the public mind. Brame shot and killed Jas. H. Lemon, a passenger conductor who put him off an L. & N. train at Baker's Station, Tenn., Sept. 11, 1889. Brame refused to pay his fare and was forcibly ejected and while standing on the ground shot and killed Lemon, who was on the steps. The murderer escaped and impressing a horse arrived in this city a day or two afterwards. He was sheltered by relatives here until detectives got on his trail, when he disappeared and has since been at large. He is a very plucky man and it was not believed that he would permit himself to be taken alive. He had previously killed a man named Beaumont, an officer from Clarksville, who undertook to arrest him at Olivet church, near Garrettsburg, thirteen years ago, without the necessary papers. He was tried for this killing and acquitted. A rather singular coincidence is that Rev. A. W. Meacham, of Bellevue, was a witness to both of Brame's killings, although they occurred in different States. He was preaching at Olivet church and saw Beaumont shot while trying to pull Brame from his horse, and also happened to be on the train and witnessed the trouble that ended in Lemon's death. Brame put in a plea of self-defense and will allege that Lemon kicked him from the steps. It is claimed that a well-known citizen of Clarksville who testifies, but none of the other eye-witnesses have made similar statements and Brame will probably have trouble in establishing such a theory. The case will have to be tried at Nashville, as the crime occurred in Davidson county.

BRAME'S STORY.

The Nashville American of yesterday gives this as Brame's story: "After the crime I went directly to Hopkinsville, where I remained a few days. Being accustomed to wear a beard all over my face, I shaved, and putting on another suit of clothes, walked to Henderson, traveling at night only. From Henderson I went to Vincennes, Ind., where I took a train to St. Louis, where I stopped a few days, but soon continued my flight to Omaha, where I got in with a gang of railroad laborers who were going out into the Black Hills. I soon returned to Omaha and went out to a little station called Florence, five miles from the city, where I secured employment with Hungate & Co., ice dealers, who gathered their ice from large reservoirs in the neighborhood. I was sitting in a cabin in a canon, not far from the place where I worked, reading a letter from home, when Detective Stewart and Deputy Sheriff Grobe walked in and told me to throw up my hands, which I did."

Quartermaster Court is still in session and various cases of minor importance and of no interest to the general public are being disposed of.

The Wheelers and Grangers have organized a strong company and established a tobacco warehouse at Clarksville which is called the Union Tobacco Warehouse. The officers are as follows: President, A. V. Goodpasture; vice-President, W. R. Browder; Secretary, A. E. Goodman; Executive Committee, E. M. Nolan, W. W. Gill, C. D. Ball, other directors, I. M. Fort, J. J. Blakely, Robert Hodges, L. A. Jobs, W. H. White and W. D. Merriweather. C. F. Warfield, of Clarksville, is Superintendent and General Manager.

Rev. John O. Rust preached at the Baptist church Sunday morning to a crowded house. Like all of this gifted young divine's discourses, it was an eloquent and earnest specimen of pulpit oratory, although the sermon was an extemporized one, preached without notes or previous preparation.

Many women find great difficulty in arranging their hair becomingly, because of its harsh and coarse texture. By the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair becomes soft, pliant, and glossy. The Vigor is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

Fire in the Seventh Ward.

The residence of Mrs. Jennie Wooley, on West Seventh street, caught on fire yesterday evening at 1:30 o'clock and was burned down. The newly organized fire company turned out, but the house was a good distance away and the fire was well under way before the engine got to work. The household goods were moved out, but the house could not be saved. It was a one-story cottage, opposite Mr. W. J. Withers' residence.

The senior proprietor of this paper has been subject to frequent colds for some years, which were sure to lay him up if not doctored at once. He finds that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is reliable. It opens the secretions, relieves the lungs and restores the system to a healthy condition. If freely used as soon as the cold has been contracted and before it has become settled in the system, it greatly lessens the attack and often cures in a single day what would otherwise have been a severe cold.—Northwestern Hotel Reporter, Des Moines, Iowa. 50 cent bottles for sale by Buckner Leavell.
